

Tartu, Estonia

A presentation by Orsolya Németh

Travelling

When we left Hungary, the weather was nice and sunny. But as we arrived to Warsaw, Poland, cold air hit our faces. Though still not as cold as it was in Estonia. From Tallinn Airport we had a 2,5 hour long bus journey, and after our arrival everyone found their host students and went home to get to know each other a bit.

School

On the first day at school we got to know each other with the help of some games, then the students showed us around. The school has an interesting structure, because it was built from 5 different buildings. Students have a separate room where they can be by themselves without teachers, and this is the only place in the school where is no WIFI.

Bog tour

We spent an adventurous day in a bog. It was fun, although the weather was pretty cold. We had a tour guide, who told us a lot of interesting facts about the plants and wildlife of that area. Everyone had to wear a pair of special tools on their feet in order not to sink into the marshy ground.

Tartu

Tartu is the city of knowledge. On the top left corner we can see the University of Tartu, which is one of the best universities of the country. Tartu has beautiful buildings, and a huge variety of statues.

Food

Estonians eat a lot of meat with boiled potatoes, and raw fish with black bread. Dairy products are quite important parts of their diet, just like milk, cheese, and kama, a special Estonian drink made of yoghurt and different kind of flours. They also love chocolate candies.

Folkdance

MOV_0641.mp4

National heritage is very-very important in Estonia. A great example for this is folkdance. We can say that most of the teenagers dance happily, passionately. They take their trainings seriously, as they have at least 3 per week, and they last until 10 o'clock in the evening. This hard work makes close friendships, and makes the dancers proud for their motherland.
